

THIS IS THE YEAR FOR A MAJOR DOWN PAYMENT ON PENNSYLVANIA'S FUTURE.

A recently released interactive map from Education Voters of Pennsylvania shows how much more funding school districts would receive from Governor Wolf's proposal this year to increase state education funding by $1.75 billion in new education funding for public schools.

This year more so than any year in recent memory, the money is there for this historic investment in Pennsylvania's students.

According to the Independent Fiscal Office (IFO), the state's revenues again exceeded projections in March, putting the state's coffers more than $3 billion above estimate for the current fiscal year.

That will contribute to the projected surplus at the end of the fiscal year totaling at least $5.2 billion.

If you add in the state's Rainy Day Fund and unspent American Recovery Plan and other federal dollars, the state will have as much as \$12 billion on hand for spending as the state enters the 2022-23 fiscal year.

There is much more than enough on hand to pay for the governor's $1.75 billion education funding investment, which will lift students and provide relief for local taxpayers.

Let's make it clear to Pennsylvania's students and their families: this is YOUR year!
