

ADEQUACY FUNDING BENEFITS ENTIRE COMMONWEALTH

Pennsylvania lawmakers voted for the adequacy funding formula in last year's budget, making a crucial commitment to complying with the constitutional mandate to fully fund public schools. Now, some GOP Senators are publicly musing about abandoning this formula before it can fully deliver on its promise to public school students

Virtually every Senate district in Pennsylvania stands to gain from adequacy funding. Walking away now would deny students the educational resources they deserve and break a promise to Pennsylvania families.

In fact, 74% of public school students in GOP districts would benefit from adequacy funding if the Senate passed a budget with an increased investment in adequacy funding equal to the increase in last year's bipartisan budget, compared to 64% in Democratic Senate districts. That would amount to $246 million to help over 700,000 students in the schools most in need in GOP Senate districts.

The numbers don't lie – if GOP Senators abandon the adequacy formula they already voted for, they're also abandoning the vast majority of public school students in their own Senate districts.
